is a Kosher kitchen, and if you have not spent time in our kitchen I can pair you with someone familiar with the routine. I normally make phone calls, but it is difficult for me to do that this month because of last minute family commitments. It is especially urgent for me to fill the July and August slots soon. Don't hesitate or someone will take the time slot that you wanted for a celebration or yahrzeit.

Thank you,

SISTERHOOD

Hello All,

Last month's Lunch Bunch was attended by a nice crowd who enjoyed our lunch at Walton's Southern Table. It was a pleasure to see some new faces joining us!

The SH Board is working on our slate of officers and chairwomen for the coming year. If you are interested in participating, please contact Natha.

We've got a new freezer in the kitchen, and have converted the original freezer to a refrigerator. All is going well and we're happy with the situation!

As hard as it is to imagine, it's almost time to begin work on next year's New Year Book! Look for your renewal letter to arrive in June. We hope you'll help us keep this project strong by responding. It's where we earn the funds we use during the year for Rabbi Luncheons, the Latke Party, the Purim Hot Dog Supper, the Seder, etc.

Have a safe and healthy Summer!

Brenda

FATHERS OF THE TANACH: AND TODAY

By Ted Roberts

Father's Day inspires us to consider the Tanach and the colorful parade of fathers and sons that march through its pages. I must be as honest as the Torah is honest and report that this is not a totally uplifting experience. Fathers and sons - a complex duality, especially in our Book. And in bible times nobody's camel had a sign on its rear end asking if you hugged your kids that morning. There is not much affection in the biblical male world - including fathers and sons - though that grand reunion of Joseph and Jacob is a touching scene. "Joseph wept on his neck a long while."

But first we have Abraham and Isaac. Yes, it's good to obey the Lord when he demands the almost ultimate sacrifice. But Isaac must have been mildly depressed until he saw the ram caught in the thicket and realized he was off the hook. I would guess that after this misadventure, their father-son relationship wasn't what it used to be. I don't think they attended the wrestling matches in the meadow like they did in the old days. The Chumash is silent on their later relationship.

Isaac grows up and begets Jacob. Shepherding must be a full-time occupation, like managing Microsoft, because Isaac, like his father before him, does not dedicate a lot of attention to young Jacob. In fact, who can forget that great historical deception wherein Jacob, with the help of Mama and a bowl of savory stew, steals the blessing. (Emeril would have used a generous handful of chopped garlic and a spoonful of cumin. The Chumash doesn't even mention salt and pepper!) Another father-son inter-generational failure!!

It gets worse. Jacob, the spice-less goat stew chef, suffers a commensurate punishment with his own unruly boys who, in turn, deceive their father about Joseph, his favorite son. Thinking him dead, there's no communication for a couple of decades between the two - not a single letter. Finally, they have that enthusiastic reunion in Egypt. All's well - in this relationship - that ends well.

The next significant father and son drama features David and his boys. It almost cannot be told in a family publication like the Tanach. David must have used an early version of Dr. Spock's childrearing manual to raise his brood. David's permissiveness results in a son who - ahem - forces himself upon a half-sister; and much worse, a son, Absalom, who tries to steal his father's throne. David - ever the loving father - cries at his death.

And let's not forget Jonathan, son of Saul. Crazy King Saul, who was as green as the meadows of Sharon - with jealousy of David. So, who was David's best pal? Every Sunday School child knows the answer. Saul's own son, Jonathan! whose loyalty to his friend exceeds his love for father Saul. Another flawed relationship. Fathers and sons - as dysfunctional in the Tanach as in real life. But is that not the test of truth, in our Holy Book?
