FROM THE RABBI

INSPIRED

Richard Dawkins refers to Mike Cullen as “the most important mentor in my life.” That alone aroused my interest in this ornithologist whom you and I and everyone we know has never heard of.

John Michael Cullen (1927-2001) taught at Oxford while Dawkins was a graduate student there, though Dawkins wasn't actually Cullen's student.

Professor Dawkins said that everyone who knew him had the same story to tell: If you had a problem with your research, you went to Mike Cullen. The brilliant man listened intently. Then he rushed off. The next morning, you would find at your door a set of pages with explanations, diagrams, mathematical charts as needed, and “always encouragement.” It was Mike Cullen, happy to help you, whether you were his student or not.

Everyone wondered when Cullen had any time for his own life, and when he had time for his own research. He certainly eschewed payment for his generosity. More significantly, as a research scientist he never sought to add his name to the published papers, even though his name could have appeared on hundreds of such documents that emerged from Oxford during his time.

Here are the concluding words from Richard Dawkins' funeral oration: “We may know scientists as intelligent as Mike Cullen, though not many. We may know scientists as generous in support, though vanishingly few. But I declare that we know nobody who had so much to give, combined with so much generosity in giving it.”

Dawkins was near tears as he spoke the words. As someone who is at vast removes in time, space, intelligence and scientific inquiry from Mike Cullen, I cite that passage without tearful sentiment. But I am moved just the same. I need to know that there are Mike Cullens in this world.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

Thank you to Jonathan, Barry and all the participants in the virtual Passover Seder held last month. We enjoyed the group "Six13," a six-man Jewish a cappella band, who provided the recorded music for the 2nd night Seder (<https://www.six13.com/>).

We now return full-time to the Synagogue with an in-person Nachas Israeli Independence Day celebration on May 1. Our next Board Meeting will be held on Monday, May 2, and our grand-reopening event on May 22 (refer to Max Rosenthal's article in the March Shofar). A special thanks also to Max for installing an upgrade to our HVAC air filters in preparation for our collective return. The newly installed filters are advertised to trap more than 98% of airborne particles, including allergens, dust, bacteria and viruses. We hope this will make our Sanctuary healthier and safer.

Lastly, our final Rabbi gatherings this spring will be held virtually on May 5, 12, 20 and June 6 (Yizkor).

Wishing you all continued health and enjoyment of the weather this delightful spring.

Steve Goodman

EC BOOK CLUB

The Etz Chayim Book Club has been reviewing the book "A Short History of the Jews," by M. Brenner and will be discussing the book on May 12. Even if you have not read the book you are invited to attend the brilliant discussion, including the part about the two different men who Jews believed were the messiah.

A SUPERMOM GIVES A MORAL FOR MOTHER'S DAY

By Ted Roberts, (1930-2020), the Scribbler on the Roof

Mothers, raising kids is no picnic. That is not news. Besieged parents need all the help they can get. So let me suggest we might benefit from a counseling session with a 17th century matron – a prodigious mother named Gluckel of Hameln (with that name you gotta be good). Does the city sound familiar? It should. It's Hamelin of Pied Piper fame. Remember the charismatic guy with the flute leading all the kids to the riverbank? Well, it wouldn't have worked if Mother Gluckel had been around.

Sadly, Gluckel died in 1724, which prevented her from hosting the greatest TV talk show ever about parents and kids! But she left us a legacy in the form of her memoirs.

This worthy woman lived many centuries ago in Germany; the product of a well-to-do family who was given in marriage at the age of 14. (She must have been a beauty with a generous dowry to overcome that name.) The adolescent wife blossomed into Motherhood and produced twelve children. But even more important than enriching her local obstetrician – she somehow found time to write her memoirs.

Long, long ago, this supermom understood a childrearing mystery that we haven't yet figured out. The question: Why don't our kids write more often, or call – say once a week? Why don't they love us more?

For 18 years mother fills their little minds with wisdom, wipes their little runny noses, and loads up their little arms with presents. And what do we get in return, Zippo! Every three months, Citibank, no kin whatsoever, writes us a cheery, chatty note attached to a new credit card. Citibank, this total stranger, writes regularly while from your Sidney – not a word.

Let's face it, no matter how much love, how many gifts you give your kids, they'll never reciprocate with the constant, intense love you demand.

The great puzzle is WHY? Particularly since you're a prince of parents. Generous, entertaining, caring. An all 'round fascination to the rest of the human race. (Citibank is not your only correspondent. There's Amoco, Chemical Bank, and the restaurant that sends you a coupon redeemable for a free iced tea.)

Well, this is the conundrum that Gluckel of Hameln examined and explained; she tells us of a mother eagle who must ferry her brood over a wide sea to a new nest. Four fledglings depend on her – four perilous trips. She fights a head wind, her wings grow weak, and there's far to go. "Do you love me?" asks the eagle of her first charge "and will you promise to repay me for this?"

"Yes, I swear," pipes the child.

The mother knows a lie when she hears one, so she drops her burden into the sea. Same story with eaglet two and three. But the fourth child gives the universally honest answer for offspring of every breed. "Mother," it says, "I can only promise that when I have my own children, I shall do as much for them as you have done for me."

The debt will be paid in full, but only to your grandchildren.

The weary mother knows the truth when she hears it. So she fights the wind and fatigue, finally bringing this child and the father of her grandchildren safely to the shore. There's a lot of wisdom in that parable. Family love, like rivers, doesn't flow uphill, but mostly down.

So console yourself. Your kids, who NEVER even send you a postcard, will likewise receive no postcards from THEIR loving, but busy kids. Moreover, one day over a nice cup of tea at the kitchen table, they'll ask your advice on this problem; "Mom, I'm telling you they never call or write. I send presents – nothing comes back. What is it with kids?" Sip your tea, look thoughtful, then tell them the fable of Gluckel.
